Miss Martha Maury Robinson entertained last evening at a buffet supper given at her home, 818½ West Franklin Street, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. T. Garnett Tabb. Mrs. Tabb has been one of the most entertained of this winter and some very handsome functions have been given in her honor since her arrival in Richmond. Mrs. Robinson was one of the bridesmaids at her wedding, which took place in Wilmington, N. C., early in the season.

It was a very informal affair, about twenty guests being invited. Mrs. Robinson and her daughter, Miss Tabb, were given the honor of the evening. The table in the dining-room was decorated with pink orchids arranged in Venetian glass vases and candles in white porcelain.

Entertaining To-Day. Mrs. Randolph Watkins will give a tea this afternoon at 4 o'clock in her home on Floyd Avenue. The affair is given in honor of Mrs. Royall Turpin, formerly Miss Meta Randolph, whose wedding took place soon after her arrival in Richmond.

Congressional Reception. The Washington Post: "The largest of the State receptions of the winter was given at the White House Tuesday night, when 1,813 guests passed through the Blue Room to exchange brief greetings with the President and Mrs. Taft. The reception, the third of the season, given annually in compliment to Congress, is the most democratic and thoroughly American of all the functions which take place in the White House in the course of a winter."

"There were few foreigners in Tuesday night's gathering, and the army and navy officers, whose brilliant uniforms add to the pictorial effect of the scene, were the only ones to be seen in the White House in the course of a winter."

Among the women who passed through the Blue Room as guests were some who at the next congressional reception may be occupying places in the historic line to assist the new President and the next first lady of the land to

REVISING INSURANCE RATES.
Protection May Cost Less to Property Owners of Lawrenceville.
(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
Lawrenceville, Va., January 29.—An important informal meeting of the Lawrenceville Fire Company was held Tuesday night for the purpose of discussing questions of municipal fire protection with Mr. Miller, of the South Eastern Fire Association, who is revising the insurance rates. Mr. Miller stated that on account of the water-works and the fire fighting apparatus already purchased, the insurance rate would be materially reduced. He also stated that with an expenditure of about $50 for additional equipment the town could be rated as a third-class insurance risk.

There were several insurance companies represented at the meeting. Mayor D. S. Hicks, Jr., made the statement that there were three parties vitally interested in fire protection, viz., the town, the insured citizens, and the insurance companies. The town has built a $50,000 system of water works that have made it possible for Lawrenceville to have fire protection; the Council has spent $1,500 for the purchase of reels and hose; the citizens have contributed $19 for further equipment, and the insurance companies who were saved a certain loss of $1,500 by the service of the fire company at the St. Paul's School fire Monday afternoon, have contributed nothing, as yet. Mr. Hicks then said that as this is a volunteer company and in need of funds for equipment, in view of the service already rendered and the future protection guaranteed the insurance companies, that the town is petitioned to make a liberal contribution toward purchasing the necessary equipment.

A petition will be prepared and submitted to the companies that have risen in Lawrenceville.

The members of the company are intensely interested in securing the funds for this equipment, so that the property in this town may be insured as third-class risks.

WHY ARE HATS WORN DURING DEBATES?

Habit of Members of Parliament for Which Explanation Is Sought.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.
WHAT is the reason why the members of the English Parliament invariably wear their hats during the debates, merely doffing them when they rise to address the House? This inquiry comes to me from a reader of these letters. I am sorry to say that neither I nor any one else that I am aware of can state definitely how the custom originated. But it antedates the time of Oliver Cromwell, and it is probable that it originated in some manifestation of political independence and revolt against monarchical despotism on the part of the members of the legislature.

The hat, in fact, is an emblem of sovereignty, own brother to the royal crown. The French Commons in the national legislature, or Tiers Etat, some 120 years ago, kept their hats on their heads in the presence of Louis XVI, in order to prove to him and to the people at large that their rights were sovereign in character.

Charles Kean used to be fond of relating an incident which occurred while he was playing Richard III. at New Orleans, supported by an American company, and which is not without a certain bearing, I think, just as the custom was rising here of the "noblemen of the court" were wearing their hats.

"Take your hat off during the presence of the King," he exclaimed in loud whisper, which was not, however, intended for the audience, although it reached them.

"And what of that?" shouted the American actor who played the role of Buckingham, smiling for the approval of the audience. "What of that? We are all kings in this country!"

With which he clapped down his hat lighter on his head. Fortunately the burst of applause which followed the enunciation of this republican sentiment lasted two minutes, so that Charles Kean had time to recover his equanimity, sadly upon by this interruption of his performance.

A question of hats brought about some years ago a temporary rupture of diplomatic relations between the South American Republic of Uruguay and Switzerland, and it is fortunate that the two countries are so far apart, since otherwise the world might have been called upon to witness some of those bloody wars which history teaches us have originated in disputes concerning hats.

The Uruguayan envoy at Berné at that time was a diplomat of the name of Nino, who held the rank of general in the army of his country. Arrayed in his military uniform, he figured one year at the annual manoeuvres of the Helvetic army, a regimental charger and an orderly being placed by the Swiss authorities at his disposal, as in the case of every other foreign officer present on behalf of his government.

The following year the envoy applied to the President for the same facilities that had been shown to him twelve months previously. He received, however, a curt refusal, based on the pretext that he did not happen to be in uniform when he made his application.

Determined, nevertheless, to witness the manoeuvres, the general hired a carriage, and with his son and himself, and arrayed in civilian attire, rode off to the mimic battlefield, where a large crowd of spectators had already assembled. In his way he passed the minister of the interior, the President, and, inasmuch as the latter had treated him with such marked discourtesy, he failed to take any notice of him.

The general and his little party had not been more than a quarter of an hour upon the field before an officer cantered up to them and demanded in the most imperious and aggressive tone that he should immediately ride up to the flagstaff, where the President had taken his position, and salute him by doffing his hat. The envoy indignantly refused to do anything of the kind, explaining that instead of the President had declined to accord him the customary courtesies due to his rank, he was attending the manoeuvres, not in a diplomatic or military capacity, but as a private visitor. The officer rode back to the President with this message, and shortly afterwards a squad of military police surrounded the envoy and informed him that they had instructions to compel him to leave the field at once, and to remove him by force if he failed to comply with their request.

The envoy thereupon returned to his hotel with his children and addressed a strongly worded protest to the Federal State Department. Receiving no answer or apology, he complied with the instructions of his government to break off diplomatic relations with the Helvetic Republic, and closed his legation at Berné. Several years elapsed before diplomatic relations were restored.

Of course this incident served to recall the circumstance that Switzerland's successful war of independence originated, according to popular legend, in the mythical William Tell's refusal to doff his own headgear to the hat of the Austrian Governor Gessler.

At the time of the coronation of the present Czar a serious hitch occurred at Moscow in connection with the question of hats. At the grand levee held by the Emperor at the Kremlin, it was insisted that every person, whatever his rank or creed, should uncover before the Czar. The Emir of Bokhara, being a vassal of Russia, was compelled to submit to this decree, in spite of his being a Moslem.

At the coronation of the Emperor of China, absolutely declined to bare their heads, and kept away. In fact, none of them were present, either at the ceremony of the coronation or at the levee of the Emperor.

One of the most sanguinary insurrections that marked the reign of Charles III. of Spain, costing thousands of lives, and compelling the flight of the King, was the revolt of the Catalans, which originated with the issue of a royal edict that men must fasten up or else remove altogether the huge flapping brims of their hats. The Spaniards, although warring against every other form of monarchical despotism, absolutely declined to obey the King's commands in the matter of hats, and announced their readiness to sacrifice their property and even their lives sooner than yield—in one word, to change their hats as the most vital point of their honor, conscience and principles. Finally, after much bloodshed, the King was forced to a compromise, whereby every one within the walls of Madrid agreed to wear his brim turned up, while outside he was at liberty to let it slouch.

Blood likewise flowed in the streets of Lisbon about the same time, in consequence of the issue of a royal edict that the King should not only order the banishment of all Jews, but likewise insist that all Portuguese citizens professing the Catholic faith who had any Hebrews among their ancestors should wear white hats, so that the "taint" of their blood might be signalled, with a view to subjecting them to ostracism. As there is hardly a single family in Lisbon which does not claim that it does not have a number of Jews among its forbears, the decree was resisted by the people, and an insurrection of so much gravity ensued that the existence of the throne was in danger.

At length the Prime Minister, the witty and brilliant Marquis de Pombal, finding remonstrance and argument powerless to induce the fanatical monarch to repeal the decree, determined to appeal to his sense of humor. He pretended to have been won over to the King's views, and presenting himself before his Majesty, drew forth from underneath his mantle two white hats, which he solemnly placed upon the table.

Greatly astonished, the sovereign inquired the meaning of this extraordinary action of the Premier. Said the latter: "I have come to see that I obey your Majesty's commands, with one hat for you and the other for myself!" thus recalling to the monarch the well-known fact that the house of Braganza itself claimed to be of Jewish strain. The King had the good sense to see the joke, laughed heartily and permitted the marquis to withdraw the obnoxious edict.

PINED FOR DOG AND SLED.
Boy Rode Forty Miles on a Freight Train to Get Them.
Bellefonte, Pa., January 29.—Love for his three-legged dog and a battered old sled prompted Jesse Womack, eleven years old, to board a freight train and ride forty miles to Lima. There he regained possession of his pet and sled, but he fell into the hands of the police. Frightened by his arrest, the boy told the police he had been enticed to Lima by a stranger. Investigation, however, showed that Jesse's parents had moved from Lima to Bellefonte several weeks ago, leaving the three-legged pet and the old sled, both of which were sent to the latter town with him to-night.

WANTS TO HONOR HIMSELF
"One-Day Millionaire" Seeks Site for His Own Statue.
Wilkes-Barre, Penn., January 29.—John J. McDewitt, who went broke playing "millionaire for a day," has petitioned the city council for a public site on which to erect and dedicate a monument to himself. The "one-day millionaire" asks that a public site be set aside for him and proposes to have a costly monument unveiled with appropriate exercises. He states that he will provide his own band and deliver a speech that will go down as a masterpiece.

McDewitt arranged some time ago for the purchase of the monument. It has taken all his time since to gather enough money to pay the sculptor. Now that he has the money and is to get the statue, he wants to place it "put it where it will be seen and referred to as the statue of one of the wonders of his time."

HAD BUTCHER ARRESTED.
Woman Says She Paid for Trimmings That Were Sold to Another.
Chicago, January 29.—Housewives in Evanston to-day listened to testimony against P. J. Rapp, a butcher, who was accused by Mrs. George F. Jackson, wife of a professor in the Northwestern University, of selling her four pounds of meat, and removing two pounds of "trimmings" after the weighing, and of selling the two pounds of waste to another customer.

The meat was cut and sold by one of Rapp's employees, Frank Weyl. Mrs. Jackson caused the arrest of the clerk, and the case was thrashed out before Justice Boyer.

Arguments were presented by butchers present to prove that the circumstances of which Mrs. Jackson complained were customary.

Justice Boyer refused to agree with the butchers, and discharged Weyl, and told Mrs. Jackson that she should have Rapp arrested.

Senate Approves It as Substitute for Lever-Smith Measure.

Washington, January 29.—The Page vocational educational bill, authorizing maximum appropriations of over $14,000,000 for agricultural and trade educational work was adopted by the Senate to-day as a substitute for the Lever-Smith bill, which has passed the House. A fight extending over many days in which both sides of the Senate has been divided, ended when a motion by Senator Page to substitute his original for the Lever bill was carried by a vote of 21 to 20.

The measure then passed the Senate and will go to the House and ultimately into a conference committee. The original House bill appropriated the maximum sum of approximately $5,000,000 for the establishment of extension departments in the State agricultural colleges through which instruction in agricultural and home economics would be carried into the homes of the farmers. The Page bill would establish courses of instruction in trades and industry, home economics and agriculture in the various public schools of secondary grade, provide for State agricultural schools, testing and plant breeding stations, the education of teachers, and general extension work.

Senators Page and Hoke Smith became involved in sharp controversy over the debate Senator Page intimating that Senator Smith had given assurances that he would support Senator Page's bill in revised form. This Senator Smith denied. Senator Page finally withdrew an amended form of his bill which included practically the House bill and the Senate then adopted the original Page bill. It is believed that as a result of the action of the Senate to-day the agricultural education measure may remain in controversy between the two houses when the present session ends.

BALKED IN LOVE: KILL HIMSELF

Portsmouth Man Commits Suicide When Girl Rejects His Attentions.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
Newark, Va., January 29.—W. Bernar George, twenty-five years old, formerly deputy high constable of Portsmouth, committed suicide at 1:30 o'clock this afternoon on the sidewalk near the home of Miss Helen Drummond, 160 Peachtree Street, after Miss Drummond positively refused to accept his attentions and told him she is to marry another next Saturday.

George had been an attentive suitor, in spite of Miss Drummond's refusal to accept him. He called at her home every two or three days, and repeated his appeals, yet she was still unresponsive. When she told him this afternoon that she was to be married on Saturday, he pulled out a revolver and declared his intention of killing her, but as that moment her brother stepped into the house, Miss Drummond grabbed George's hand when he drew the revolver but did not attempt to use it.

Leaving the house, he walked around a corner and shot himself in the temple, dying instantly.

Frederick ran off to Ohio after committing the offense, and an officer was sent after him.
